

KUALA LUMPUR , JULY 4 2014

Are you a LEGO enthusiast? Do you eat, sleep and breathe architecture?
Do you love cities just like we do? All of the above?

For the upcoming George Town Festival in August 2014, #BetterCities will be staging an interactive exhibition The Living City. Devised as a collective experience of creating a city, The Living City uses LEGOs as a medium to explore city-making and architecture. As part of the exhibition, #BetterCities is organising a 2-day masterclass workshop led by the Danish-Icelandic architecture studio, KRADS.

About KRADS

The workshop will be conducted by the founders of KRADS, Kristján Eggertsson and Kristján Örn Kjartansson. KRADS is an architectural studio based in Denmark and Iceland. Working as one team, their transnational setup generates a dynamic environment in which they mobilize and re-imagine the Scandinavian culture of architecture and design in an internationally aimed constellation. Since 2010, KRADS has organised lectures and workshops on themes at the intersection of LEGO and architecture.

At the workshop, KRADS and 15 selected participants will be taking a closer look at car parks: How can these areas better respond to the urban fabric? How they could be part of a denser, more varied and lively city? LEGO bricks will be used as thinking tools.

#BetterCities invites architecture/urban planning students and young professionals to apply. The Master Class is free of charge and is open to 15 selected participants.

The workshop will take place at MPPP Town Hall in George Town, from Saturday, August 16, to Sunday, August 17, between 10am to 6pm.

Participants are expected to bear the cost of transport to George Town (if necessary), their own accommodation and living expenses. There will be no reimbursement from the organisers of the workshop.
